“Working in International Education”

What is entailed in working in international development and international education today? International Education is a complex and multi-disciplinary sector. It has now expanded to an integrated development model which is tied to other sectors such as Health, Finance and/or Conflict. This brownbag will discuss some of the complexities of IE and will also explore the challenges for professionals working in this area. This session will focus on careers in international education and can be of interest to both graduate students and faculty.

SAKIL MALIK a veteran of work in international education, is the Director for the Reading within Reach (REACH) Project and Global Reading Network (GRN) funded by USAID. He has more than 20 years of experience in international project management, focused on literacy, social and human development and human rights. His portfolio at Creative Associates as the Senior Associate/Director was $100 Million in five countries, namely Tanzania, Timor Leste, Cambodia, India and Tajikistan. Before arriving at Creative, he was the Director of Global Operations at the International Reading Association in Washington, DC, where he led program management of literacy projects and provided strategic leadership and direction to the Executive Team. He successfully won and administered funding from government and corporate funders, including USAID, UNESCO, Pearson Foundation and Nokia Corporation. He has a Master’s Degree in Educational Leadership and Policy from the University of Maryland, USA, a Master’s Degree in Economics from Aligarh University in India, and a Bachelor’s Degree in Commerce from Dhaka University in Bangladesh. He is a certified project manager with CIPM, CMMP and MPM certification.
